This three-day workshop will provide participants with curriculum resources, teaching strategies and awareness to infuse multicultural women's history across multiple disciplines in today's educational and social environment.

The Multicultural Study of Women's History means reclaiming the contributions and impact of all groups of women to the development of this nation. Knowing how the lives of women before us were spent, young girls and women gain the richness of our heritage and the inspiration of a tradition of activism and accomplishment. Correspondingly, young boys and men are able to expand their perceptions and expectations of the real lives and work of women.

Cost of the three-day workshop is $20 and covers materials and snacks. Space is limited to the first 75 who sign up.

To register, call Kris Inabnit at (406) 447-8521 or e-mail at kinabnit@helena.k12.mt.us.

The workshop presenter is Molly Murphy MacGregor, Executive Director of the National Women's History Project, and a former high school teacher and recognized expert on teaching women's history. She is one of the founders of the NWHP and is one of the creators of National Women's History Month in March. She has conducted teacher-training workshops for over 20 years, presented at the Organization of American Historians, The National Council for the Social Studies, National Education Association and the National Council for Sex Equity in Education conferences.

"Women's history provides positive role models for girls and women, and gives boys and men a context for understanding and appreciating the roles of women today."

—Molly Murphy MacGregor

The National Women's History Project was established in 1980 as a nonprofit educational organization committed to providing education, promotional materials and informational services to recognize and celebrate women's diverse lives and historic contributions to society. The NWHP is seen as "the source" for multicultural women's history materials and teacher training by thousands of classroom teachers and district curriculum specialists across the country. The goal of the NWHP is to promote an equitable portrayal of women in history, and to assist teachers in developing strategies for integrating multicultural women's history in all areas of the K-12 curriculum.
